(April 14)NEW ORLEANS — The boat that overturned in a Gulf of Mexico disaster that left six people dead last week was ordered to sea in dangerous conditions by an energy company that put “money over safety,” a pair of $25 million lawsuits assert. The lawsuits were filed in Texas state court in Houston by a lawyer for Hannah Daspit and Krista Vercher, both of Louisiana. To lean forward as if on the point of falling; overbalance; totter To transfer from (one conveyance) to another: To turn or cause to turn from a vertical or horizontal position To turn upside down. They include the role of the weather in the capsizing, whether the vessel should have put to sea despite forecasts of storms and who should be held responsible.The suits list numerous allegations against the companies, including that they failed to adequately assess weather conditions and failed to have an emergency plan. It warned of a thunderstorm in the area with winds in excess of 39 mph, which are tropical storm force winds, and “suddenly higher waves.”“Boats could sustain damage or capsize. The weather that they encountered was well beyond the forecast, as far as we know, at this time,” he said during a news conference Monday.Gellert said the decision on whether to go or not was up to the captain. Daspit’s husband, Dylan Daspit, and Vercher’s fiancé, Jay Guevara, were among the 19 people working on the boat when it overturned in stormy weather April 13. Six people were rescued, and six bodies had been recovered and identified as of Friday afternoon. Return to safe harbor if possible,” the warning said.Still, there was no indication before the boat’s departure at 1:30 p.m. of the winds in excess of 80 mph, which are well beyond hurricane strength, and waves 7 to 9 feet high that the Coast Guard said the boat encountered about the time it overturned after 4 p.m.John Gellert, president of Seacor, has said the forecasts did not portend weather the boat was incapable of handling.“The weather they were forecasted to encounter was well within the limits of the vessel. (Ergative) (to cause) to topple over and fall (Slang, idiomatic) To rob; to stage a heist (--- Games) To change position on a board in a board game. The suits specifically accuse Talos of “ordering the vessel to sea in unsafe conditions as the charterer.”Seacor did not immediately respond to requests for comment Friday. (Mech.) To shorten and thicken (a red-hot iron) by beating on the end To turn up the keel; to show the bottom. The vessel was en route from Port Fourchon, Louisiana, to a Talos platform when it overturned.“Dylan Daspit lost his life in the tragic capsizing of the vessel, for the decision of these Defendants to put money over his life,” the Daspit lawsuit said.The similarly worded lawsuit filed Friday says “Krista Vercher lost her better half,” and adds Guevara’s child lost his father.The lawsuits involve issues likely to be critical in a National Transportation Safety Board investigation, which is expected to take as long as two years. Find another word for capsize. To spread, compress, or flatten by applying pressure with a roller: To turn and swim upside down. Commonly used for boats and ships that capsize and turn through 180° so their hulls are above their superstructure, but it can refer to any vehicle in a similar position. Both suits fault offshore energy company Talos Energy, as well as lift boat operator Seacor Marine LLC and its affiliate Seacor Liftboats LLC for the fatal accident.They are the first of what is expected to be numerous lawsuits filed over the capsizing of the Seacor Power, a 234-foot-long lift boat. He also said Ledet had the company’s full support. Vercher, suing on behalf of herself and Guevara’s child, sued Friday. Dylan Daspit and Guevara were among seven missing and presumed dead.“Pray for the lost”; Body found. 12 missing after commercial boat capsizes in stormy Gulf of MexicoHaspit filed suit Wednesday in Texas state court in Houston.
