The male is called bull, and the female is called a cow. An elephant group is usually called a flock. The elephants have one of the most intricate social structures of any species on Earth. Women's elephants generally do not give birth until they are about 15 years old. Meanwhile, the males are not ready to play until they reach the age of about 30 years. Once women mature and become mothers, they can have up to 12 calves in their lives, usually waiting a year after birth to become pregnant again. The gestation period for an elephant is 22 months. Reproduction of elephants When the female cow is ready to give birth, it will stay close to other trusted women in her her herd to receive protection when she finally goes to work. Birth is fast, and elephants almost always have only one baby. The average calf is about 3 feet tall and weighs about 120 pounds. The mother of the calf and other herd elephants help her at her feet, and she is able to remain alone within 2 hours of birth. At birth, the calf is hairy with long tail and short trunk. Elephant baby first 2 years Elephants don't mature as fast as many other animals, and usually don't leave their mother's milk until they're about two years old. A few days after birth, the calf is strong enough to walk and keep his herd, although the females in the herd can slow their pace to help any new baby keep up with them. During those first months, the mother and the other females in the herd guide him, teaching him what plants are good to eat and how to stay safe from predators. After six months, the calf begins to eat vegetation in addition to breast milk. Adult elephants Adult elephants are the largest land mammals on Earth. They can grow up to 13 feet on the shoulders and more than 14,000 pounds. They can live up to 70 years. Herds dominated by women and the social life of an elephant Having family and friends around as part of the herd is important for the life of the elephant. They live in feminine herds, often casting out males who will live alone or in smaller groups. The oldest female in the herd is generally her leader. Your job is to help with socialization, survival and the search for food and water. The herds usually consist of up to 20 elephants. The elephants are said to be friendly and intelligent, and they greet each other with their trunks. They can identify a friendly elephant up to 2 miles away through low sounds and noises. Other features that elephants show that they are not always common in the animal kingdom are solving problems, mourning and empathy. Elephant types While there are several elephant subspecies, there are only two species. African elephants tend to be bigger and live longer. As the name suggests, they live mainly in some 37 African countries. Asian elephants are smaller and have a shorter life. They live in at least 13 Asian countries. Elephant habitatsAsian elephants typically live in the tropical forests and forests of the continent. African elephants live in sub-Saharan Africa. They thrive in heat conditions where they have access to a lot of vegetation. When water is scarce, elephants can hit the ground to find underground streams. MORE FROM REFERENCE.COM REFERENCE.COM
