Defining how many countries are there in the world is not easy. According to our definition here 197TravelStamps, there are 197 sovereign countries of the world. There are 193 independent countries and recognized the United Nations and in addition, we consider four independent territories as countries: Kosovo, the Vatican, Taiwan and Palestine. Since it can be difficult to remember the capitals of each country or the currency they use, we created this list handy of all the countries and capitals and currencies around the world. Of the 197 independent countries of the world, not all countries have their own currencies. Most EU countries have adopted the euro as its official currency since the year 1999. There are similar monetary unions in West and Central Africa, the Pacific region, the Caribbean and Central America. At the same time one else has a range of dependent territories or overseas territories around the world that use a different currency than the country governing. This page provides an overview of all countries and their currencies. For better overview, there are two tables on this page. The first table shows all the 197 independent countries and their currencies. The second table shows all the dependent territories around the world that use a currency other than their country of origin. You can scroll down or click here to go directly to the currency list of all dependent territories. All independent countries and capitals and currencies around the world if you need a list of all the capitals of the world or a world currency list, we've got you covered.
