The Walking Dead Theater 11 received a release date at a August from AMC. The release date was revealed in a new teaser for the final season, which broadcast on Sunday evening following the final of the season 10 of the dead on foot. The culminating point of the teaser is the first floor of a very familiar red armor to the readers of The Comic Book The Walking Dead, from which the series takes inspiration. It belongs to the Fan-Favorite Mercer, the main official of Commonwealth soldiers, charged to maintain the order in the largest network of communities on the post-apocalyptic world. The Commonwealth was already introduced in the season 10, and the name of Mercer was even mentioned in the episode 20. Given this, the organization and the character should be central for the final season of the dead on foot. Mercer will be played by Michael James Shaw, which was recently jagged in Avengers: Infinite War and Avengers: Endgame. The image via AMC MAG has announced that the dead round will end with last year's season 11, a decision that surprised both the fans and the crew. For twelve years, the dead who walks was a great force on television, making the call to finish before expected without consulting showrunner Angela Kang a strange move for AMC. Especially when we take into consideration the current expansion of the franchise, with the next series focused on Carol (Melissa McBride) and Daryl (Norman Reedus), the series of Anthology tale of the dead on foot, and the films planned after the former protagonist of the series Rick Grimes (Andrew Lincoln). Fortunately, the final season of the dead walk will obtain another eight episodes at the top of usual 16, bringing it to a total of 24 episodes. This is the second significant expansion to the show, which also has six extra episodes in season 10. Just as it happened with the season 10, the season 11 the planes of episodes in different release windows. The first part of the season, with eight episodes, promises to bring back scenes packaged by the action and major worldbuilding of the fans of the dead who walked so far, after the last six extra episodes of the season 10 focused on smaller and guided stories. The first part of the season 11 of the dead walk will be premiere on August 22nd. You can check the teaser for the last season right below. KeepA ️.
