Sony ic recorder px370 manual

Sony ic recorder icd-px370 manual.

The following describes the basic registration steps with the selected sensitivity level of the integrated microphone and the recording mode. Note If you accidentally touch your IC recorder or allows an object in contact with it during contact with it while the recording is in progress, frustration or scratch noises can be recorded. Tip Before starting recording, we recommend that you first test or monitor recording. For instructions on monitoring recording, see Registration Audio Monitoring. The recorded files are stored in "Folder01" under "recorded files" by default. To change the file storage destination folder for the recorded file, see Changing the File Storage Destination folder. Select "record" in the Home menu, then press. The Registration Standby screen appears on the display window. Turn your IC recorder so that its integrated microphone () points in the direction of the target sound source. Press REC / PAUSE. The record screen seems to indicate that the recording has started and the operating indicator () lights up in red. If you press and hold Rec / Pause, the IC recorder will stop. He will not start recording. During recording it is in progress, the recording level guide () is displayed on the registration screen. As shown below, three or four black squares () on the recording level guide indicate optimal recording volume levels for the sound source. Adjust the orientation of the built-in microphone, the distance from the sound source, or the microphone sensitivity setting to maintain the volume within the optimal radius. For more information on the registration level guide, see Registration Level Help. Press STOP to stop recording. The message is "Saving ... Message and therefore the registration standby screen appear. Now you can allow you to play the file you just registered. Note While the message is "Saving ... Message on the display window, your IC recorder is saving the file in the memory memory. If the IC recorder is running on AC power, do not disconnect the USB AC adapter (not supplied) to avoid data corruption. Tip You can also press REC / PAUSE To start recording during playback is in progress or a menu is on the display window. You can still press REC / PAUSE to pause the recording in progress while a menu is on the display window. The recorded files are named as " (registration date) _ (registration time). (File format) (e.g. 161010_0706.mp3). While playback is in progress or in standby, you can press and hold REC / PAUSE to pause the IC recorder for registration. This helps adjust the registration volume level without registering unnecessary audio data. Use this guide when you have questions about how to use your IC recorder.
