By Daniel Westlake A movie soundtrack is one of the most important parts of a film, yet few people know how or where to download them. You can buy tracks at iTunes or AmazonMP3. However, there are a number of online sites where you can download that amazing movie soundtrack you heard in that film the other day. All you need to do is identify the movie, the composer and check out one of these sites. An extensive database that goes beyond the opening theme song, the song over the credits or the tune all the characters dance to-it features the less notable numbers from a film that only real fans will recognize. With more than 45,000 titles to choose from, SoundtrackCollector.com is for the serious musician and soundtrack enthusiast who is truly a fan of composers and the often brilliant and underappreciated work they do for every film. With what may be the biggest database of movie soundtracks online, ArtistDirect.com provides most of these downloads for free (with a fee that must be paid for access to others). However, most of the soundtracks that are the easiest to find are mainstream pop songs that have been purchased for the soundtrack, not necessarily from composers who have done movie scores. Keep this in mind if you are looking for something reasonably obscure. Last.fm seems to have most music tracks in its database-the challenge comes with finding those tracks. If you're going to use Last.fm to track down these free soundtracks, have all the keyword information available to locate them. Some of the titles are listed by film, some are listed by composer and others are just listed by title. Don't be discouraged if you can't find it initially-or just use one of the other sites listed above. "Doctor Strange 2," "Avatar 2," "Disenchanted," and "Thor 4" are some of Disney's anticipated films of 2022. Marvel Studios, 20th Century Studios, Walt Disney Studios The following list contains Walt Disney Studios' theatrical film slate as of April 27, 2022 and major movies heading straight to Disney+ and Disney-owned Hulu. Pixar Animation Pixar's next film revolves around Mei Lee (Rosalie Chiang), a "confident, dorky" 13-year-old who turns into a giant red panda whenever she gets too excited. Sandra Oh ("Killing Eve") voices her slightly overprotective mother, which probably isn't too helpful when Mei is turning into a giant bear all the time. The studio's first all-female-led production is directed by Oscar-winner Domee Shi (Pixar's "Bao") and also stars the voice talents of Orion Lee, Wai Ching Ho, Ava Morse, Maitreyi Ramakrishnan, and Hyein Park. Another reason to be excited for this one? Billie Eilish and her brother Finneas O'Connell teamed up to write songs for a fictional boy band, 4*Town, in the upcoming film, with O'Connell voicing one of the members of the band. Keep reading Features Disney Disney Plus The excitement around Black Panther, Marvel's first black superhero movie, is deafening. The film, released today, is poised to bring home $180 million this weekend. According to the movie tickets site Fandango, it has pre-sold more tickets than any other superhero movie. The buzz seems justified: Movie critics are calling it "incredible, kinetic, purposeful" and "as touching as it is thrilling." To many, Black Panther is more than a movie. It's a cultural phenomenon, a necessary and joyous tribute to being black-not just in America, but in the global African diaspora. Celebrities are buying out theaters in underserved neighborhoods so black children can see faces like their own onscreen. Nigerians, Kenyans, and Ghanaians are sporting traditional garb to see the movie. Many non-black people are also eager to share in this worldwide celebration. But it's easy to feel nervous about how to engage in and respectfully support the identity-focused wave of elation. The answer is clearly not to mute that excitement. But know this: If you're white, this is one time that you won't see someone who looks like you onscreen fighting villains, commanding power, or saving innocent people. And that's precisely why you should go see this film. The power of (not) seeing yourself onscreen White people are very used to seeing themselves onscreen. A study from the University of Southern California examined 800 movies that came out between 2007 and 2015, and found that of 32,205 characters, just a quarter were non-white. The lack of representation is even more stark behind the camera: Just 5.5% of the directors were black, for example. Black Panther has an almost entirely black cast and a black director. That's a gift for black girls and boys everywhere who aren't used to seeing themselves onscreen-and it's a gift for non-black people, too. Fictional storytelling offers a unique opportunity for empathy, says Jennifer Barnes, a professor of psychology at the University of Oklahoma. "Fiction offers us front-row access to other people's minds," she explains. "It lets us see how emotions, and relationships, and other people's beliefs are playing out in these complicated social situations." That's why it's crucial to seek out stories that don't mirror your own life and identity. This might be even more important for non-black children. As Black Panther costumes hit the shelves, nervous parents are agonizing (paywall) over whether to encourage their non-black children to dress up as the King of Wakanda. In short, they should. Children today will hopefully be able to look up to many more black and brown heroes as they grow up-just as kids of all races and genders have long played out their childhood superhero fantasies as white males such as Superman and Batman. And don't feel inhibited from discussing Black Panther's race. Children develop a sense of race early on, and can have subconscious associations with certain races by the time they enter primary school-so avoiding the topic in the hope that race never becomes "an issue" is not particularly effective, experts say. Instead, actively encouraging children's admiration for a person of a different race or identity group, in a respectful way, helps them to thoughtfully respond to and empathize with others. Taking them to see Black Panther, and talking openly about why it's an inspiring milestone, is a great first step. The power of an alternative story's worth remembering that, as Karen Attiah, an editor at the Washington Post says, "In 2018, we live in a world where white fantasies about black inferiority still rage." Black Panther combats those persistent and pernicious fantasies with a new and inspiring story. It's one that straddles reality and fantasy. Wakanda may be fictional, but its inhabitants speak a real African language. There's "Okavango triangular, ancient, sacred geometry from Africa" all over Black Panther's suit, Ruth E. Carter, who designed the film's costumes, told The Ringer. The female fighting force have Masai beading, South African leatherwork, and hand-tooled jewelry armor. Meanwhile Wakanda, rendered as a kind of Afro-futurist utopia, is high-tech, covered in the rich mineral Vibranium, and wealthy beyond measure-a place that doesn't exist, but asks the important and provocative question, "what if?" It's important that black and non-black people take this imaginative trip, and explore how a culture's heroism, power, and technological prowess could have played out in the absence of colonialism and oppression. Of course, the film likely won't get everything right. Worries about cultural appropriation and African caricaturing have been cropping up since details about the movie first began leaking out. But participating in this moment, as a non-black person, is a useful thought experiment, and offers a glimpse of a tantalizing alternate reality. The power of your money Black Panther follows the first black-led film to make $100 million in the US, Girls Trip. It follows Get Out, which stared down the discomfort of being black in America, while grossing 40 times its production budget. And it follows Moonlight, the story of a gay, black American's coming of age, which won the best picture Oscar in 2017. Black Panther is no sleeper hit or low-budget art movie. "I hope you can tell from watching the movie, but the resources devoted to this movie are equal to and in fact surpass our last couple of movies," Kevin Feige, the head of Marvel Studios, told Vulture. It's true: The studio spent $200 million bringing Wakanda and its characters to life. Nevertheless, Hollywood remains so very white. That's despite huge box office potential among black audiences. African Americans, on average, visit theaters 13.4 times a year, compared to the 11 visits made by the average American. With movies such as Selma and Top Five, Hollywood has learned that black people will support a story that centers black characters. What's important now is that the industry learns that people of other races can identify and engage with-and be entertained by-a story with strong black characters too. There's a lot riding on Black Panther. So go see it. Buy a ticket for yourself, for your friends, for your lover, for your neighbor. Then talk about it, chew on it-enjoy it. And go see it again.
