Insolvent companies also tend to lose the ability to raise equity capital, and their suppliers can only perform collect-on-delivery (COD) transactions or demand "rescue" payments before proceeding with transactions. Establishing a presumption of insolvencyIn some cases, creditors may rely on presumptions of insolvency if proof of insolvency is almost impossible. Australian insolvency laws, which are governed by the Companies Act 2001, are primarily designed to strike and maintain a balance between the interests of an insolvency if proof of insolvency laws, which may also be affected by the financial difficulties of the company.
