Just a tattoo of us

The autoclave is a popular way to sterilize any tattoo equipment that isn't disposable. A combination of heat, steam and pressure kills all bacteria and organisms to prevent infection. Learn more about autoclaves.Be prepared to shell out some significant dollars for a tattoo. Tattoos under an inch cost between $50 and $100. Imagine what that full-back design would go for. Learn more about tattoo prices.Though tattoos are sometimes associated with rebellion, uniformity is paramount when it comes to application: Too-deep punctures result in pain and bleeding, while too-shallow ones create uneven lines. Learn more about tattoo application.Tattoo seekers can expect to feel some pain: The process has been described as similar to bee stings or sunburns. Placement, size, type and artist skill, however, can all make a difference. Learn more about tattoo pain.Unclean tattooing practices can transmit diseases such as syphilis, hepatitis B and HIV; however, there has yet to be an actual case of HIV being transmitted via a tattoo application. Learn more about tattoo health risks.Some pigments used in tattoos contain metal, which can cause pain during a magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) test, or even affect the MRI images as a result. Learn more about tattoo pigments.The U.S. Food and Drug Administration does not approve, nor regulate, the pigments and inks used for tattoos. In addition, few states regulate tattoo parlors, so it is up to you to find a safe, clean, reputable tattoo artist and parlor. Learn more about getting a tattoo safely.Get some background information on your tattoo artist. Ask to see that they have a license, and inquire as to their membership status. Tattoo artists don't have to belong to professional trade organizations, but those who do are usually the most up-to-date on information and trends in the industry. Learn more about what questions to ask your tattoo artist.After receiving a tattoo, ask your artist if they have a sheet or pamphlet that describes the required aftercare. Infected tattoos can be painful and dangerous. Learn more about tattoo aftercare.Think carefully beforehand about what kind of tattoo you'd like to have; almost a fifth of people with tattoos in the United States regret getting one, and it's usually because it contains a name. Learn more about choosing a tattoo.Here are some helpful links: Haaaaaaappy Friday mother budgeters! (You see what I did there? ;)) I hope you're ready to start this weekend off right! Perhaps with a little tattoo'ing action maybe? All of us getting one at the same time to promote fiscal communityness?? Haha... or would that actually go against that? Anywho, I thought we'd do a 5 for Friday today all about the sexy art of tattooing. Specifically YOUR tattoos, or maybe lack there of. So as always, I'll list out the 5 questions for you to answer today, and then I'll do the honors of going first. Here we go... How many tattoos do you have? If more than 0, what are they and where? (If none - why?) How much did they cost in total? Were you financially stable when getting them? ;) Do you plan on getting any more? If so, what's next? BONUS Send us a picture!! Haha... Some of this will be fun for us to see and answer, and others probably super boring ;) But luckily this is my blog so I get to talk about anything I want! And now here are my answers: How Many: ONE! But I'm realllllly getting antsy for another... What are they and where: I have a star on my upper chest - the only symbol I have pretty much loved ever since I was a kid (and the first thing I always doodle for some reason?). They say to make sure to get something you'll hopefully never regret, and 10 years into it so far so good :) Total cost: Only $90 but that was 'cuz I didn't realize you're supposed to tip :(Which I hear is one of the main ways the tattoo artists get paid? (I guess the majority of the tattoo cost itself goes straight to the shop?) Needless to say I still feel pretty terrible about it... I'd totally go back and pay the guy if I wasn't living 300 miles away AND could remember his name, haha, but it looks like I'll have to just settle with tipping the next guy/girl even more to make up for it. Lucky them! Financially stable? HAH! Not really, but I wasn't going to let that stop me ;) And something tells me it didn't stop you all either! I think if you're getting a tattoo it's pretty much telling the world you don't care about the other stuff, haha... Not that my $90 was going to set me back all TOO much anyways, or that tattoos are that "rebelish" as they used to be... Any more? Yup! I REALLLLLY want those old time sailor sparrows you've probably seen around before. I find them incredibly intriguing, and I love the meanings behind them too (mainly "safe travels" and "freedom" and/or "true love" ;)) . I know they're commonplace, but you like what you like, and I've been thinking about them for over 9 years now... So I'm pretty sure I wouldn't regret those later either. I just need someone to hit up a parlor with me as they kinda freak me out a little! I guess I'm not as hard as I used to be back in the day, haha... BONUS A pic of my star? Sure, here you go. Can you tell a 21 y/o male took it? ;) I want my boy's name on me somewhere actually too, but thinking about too many tats at the same time just stresses me out... You have to space them out or you use up all the fun at once! Just hopefully not in 10 year spaces like I seem to be doing, haha... Man I'm lazy. Oh, that reminds me of a trick I do too to make sure I really REALLY want a new tattoo: I draw it out on my skin w/ permanent marker in the exact spot I want it (or maybe a few different ones if I can't decide). This allows me to sorta "live" with it in the real world to see if I catch myself feeling more of one way or the other, and after a while I can pretty much tell if it's a keeper or not. Especially when they're visible to the public and I get comments about them ;) Like, right now I'm testing out a blackened-in heart on my hand which I'm digging a lot so far - even though, yes, I'm a guy and it's pretty girly marking (no judging!!). It reminds me to keep being good and forget the hate. Anyways, your turn. How many tattoos do you currently have? And how much have they cost you? If you don't have any, is there a reason behind it or do you just never really think about it much? Let's see how many of us are tatted here! :) ——— Photo by JD | Photography. Nico Tortorella and Nicole "Snooki" Polizzi on How Far Is Tattoo Far? | MTV Tattoos are permanent so people tend to put a lot of thought into them. How Far Is Tattoo Far? turns all of that around by having people give each other tattoos. The tattooed person usually has no clue what their partner on the show will choose and won't see the tattoo until it's done. How Far Is Tattoo Far? is so crazy that people might assume that the tattoos have to be fake. But are they? Here is everything you need to know. The casting call for How Far Is Tattoo Far? calls for people who are interested in getting a tattoo by a skilled artist If you just read the casting call, then the show sounds pretty real. The casting call reads, "we are casting couples, friends, and family to take part in this headline grabbing series." It then adds "whether your idea is funny, crazy or controversial this is your chance to reveal a secret, surprise a friend, get revenge, or show some love and make your mark!" The show has made headlines less for people showing love for each other and more for the other things listed. Angelina Pivarnick from Jersey Shore and her fiancé Chris Lorangeira were on How Far Is Tattoo Far? and he gave her a tattoo on her upper thigh of a pooping hamster. This was in reference to her nickname "Dirty Little Hamster" on her reality show. Two participants from the show have opened about their experience on How Far Is Tattoo Far? Melody Richards, who was on How Far Is Tattoo Far?, said her tattoo is real and it was very painful One participant from the show said her tattoo was not only real but so painful she couldn't finish it. "There were no breaks for that tattoo," Melody Richards revealed to Yahoo. "At a regular tattoo session, you get some few-minute breaks. No, I sat there for three hours with a needle constantly in my most sensitive area." Richards went on the show with her friend, Dacota Daniels. Daniels picked a chastity belt over Richards' abdomen because Richards wants to become a cam girl and the two have fought over it. Richards picked a tattoo reading "I like in the..." above Daniels' butt in return. Melody Richards revealed that there is one thing that is a bit deceptive about How Far Is Tatoo Far? "When I first saw it, maybe there is something in the mirrors there, but it looked f*cking huge," she said. "It looked way bigger on the show. I can say now that I look at it every day, sometimes I forget it's there. And I'm losing weight now, so it's definitely shrinking." Richards said that she plans to get her tattoo finished by a different artist. Co-host Nicole Polizzi also talked about what it has been like to watch all of these tattoos go down on How Far Is Tattoo Far? "It was so much emotion. It would be like so happy and beautiful to like, 'Oh my God, how could they do that to each other?'" she told Refinery29. "It was like a roller coaster of emotions." It looks like it's safe to say that real tattoos are being done on the reality show for better or for worse.
