This is interesting but a little late for me. Last move, 2 years ago, I thought I would have tried online agencies (not knowing what to call them) where you go to a category, eg. Deleted, and give you a list of for example 20 that are on their books, who work in that area. I received some quotations, and my movers seemed reasonable. The website was very professional, they gave many reassurances on the professional expert staff, etc. Don't go to Gory details, but the move has been a terrible experience. I returned to the original search site and left feedback. I noticed that there were many similarities on the websites, and I was getting the same people which respond to queries. So I think all's a racket - a multiple websites that fish for customers, all managed by a central service. I have to move again soon (sigh), but I'm using the yellow pages and I am obtaining quotes only from professional reactions with the registration of the sector, etc., to control it completely first. Beware of MyMoover is a Doggy removal. They are felt and steal. We are not a scam ... Compare engines and get an estimate of the free price. What a bunch of disgusting tear merchants. I really like it. So - if DFT emits a warning, why are they still in business ??? Rhetoric question 5 I like not having moved the house for almost 20 years we have been nervous for how well our chosen approximation would do the job. The date of settlement was December 29th, so finding someone who was ready to do the job of the day was a bit stumbling; Most were closed for Christmas - New Year's pause. I would be ready to start between 8:00 am and 9 : 00. We booked MyMoover on November 10 - more than a month before the date on the move. We were just moving 4 km, so figurative that we would leave home before delivery time at noon. The house was already partially emptied of Furniture because it had been decorated for sale and the designer had removed all his furniture a week before, leaving only what would have been easily mounted in a large moving van. It was already full of cartoon labeled, ready to be loaded on the truck. The first difficulty farm has arrived when Mike, in a strong Indian accent, informed me the afternoon before the move, that the van would be 2 hours because it needed repairs. The next morning, around 9:00 am, He played again and said he wouldn't have been at half a day. I pointed out that the new owners moved in Moment and which should have a replacement truck available, to which there was no answer. The eliminated ones showed up at 12 and proceeded to load furniture and boxes in what appeared to be an extraordinarily small van. As discovered, 2 trips were needed to bring a family of furniture. The 2 men were both wearing uniforms with a logo of the cleaning company on them and seemed to have no idea of to maneuver bulky furniture or stack carefully for transport. Leather sofas were scratched, torn and peeled, painted wooden shelves were scratched and dented and a wooden trolley fell above in the rear of the truck causing significant damage. The walls and doors in both old and new houses have been damaged. The kitchen table has been unnecessarily dismantled and both the double bed and a kitchen table were left in the new removed house. Boxes were stacked each other, despite a fragile - this side UPA labels to be clearly visible and at the end of all this, which had left the freezer and microwave behind! At the end day € Be corrected. The next day I noticed that the amount had been charged to my account, despite the fact that I had not signed a debt power. I paid $ 100 deposit through direct debit, so that it's how they arrived €
